

AT RISK

The Bay Area Greenbelt

The 2000 edition of the Greenbelt Mapping and Assessment Program (GMAP) — charting land conservation and development trends across the nine county San Francisco Bay Area

At Risk: The Bay Area Greenbelt was prepared by staff members of Greenbelt Alliance and GreenInfo Network. We were assisted in our analytical and research work by more than 100 planners and citizen activists from all nine Bay Area counties (see the inside back cover for a partial listing).

Greenbelt Alliance is grateful to the GAIA Fund and Fairfield Semiconductor Corporation for its strong financial support of our Greenbelt Mapping and Assessment Program (GMAP), which gave rise to this fourth edition of At Risk. Additional support was provided by the Mary A. Crocker Trust, the Wallace Alexander Gerbode Foundation, the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation, the Irvine Foundation, the David and Lucile Packard Foundation, and the True North Foundation.

This version of the Greenbelt Mapping and Assessment Program (GMAP) At Risk Report was made possible by many individuals from around the San Francisco Bay Area, who provided data and analysis related to current land use trends around the region. They included dozens of planners and citizen activists in all nine of the Bay Area's counties. Here is a partial list of planners, activists, public agency officials, and private land trust staff members who donated their time and experience to help the Bay Area understand where it is going in terms of future Greenbelt conservation and development. Of course, the maps and analyses described in this report reflect only the work of Greenbelt Alliance, and should not necessarily be construed as the views of any of the individuals listed below.

AT RISK: THE BAY AREA GREENBELT

Greenbelt Alliance is the Bay Area's leading land conservation and urban planning non-profit organization. Founded in 1958, we are dedicated to protecting the region's Greenbelt of open lands and enhancing the livability of its cities. The long-term purpose of Greenbelt Alliance is to ensure that the nine county Bay Area remains a sustainable community for all who live here — a community with a prosperous economy and a protected natural environment.

Greenbelt Alliance is a non-profit, tax-deductible organization with offices in San Francisco, San Jose, Santa Rosa, and Walnut Creek, and more than 4,000 members throughout the Bay Area.
